HUNDREDS of runners braved the heat to raise thousands of pounds for charities.

They pounded their way along a five kilometre course in Heaton Park, Manchester, in support of 30 good causes.

The run was one of three organised nationally this summer by doItforcharity.com.

The two other runs have already taken place in London and Birmingham.

Lindsay Southall, from Prestwich-based charity MedEquip4Kids, which had runners in yesterday's race, said: "We couldn't have asked for better weather.

"It was a brilliant day and it was great to see so many people running for so many different charities."

The runners each had to raise £100 for their chosen charities.

A military fitness expert helped them to warm up.

Then they set off on their course through the park, watched by dozens of picnickers and dog-walkers.

They were given refreshments and goody bags when they reached the finish line - after raising an estimated £30,000.

Abigail Bachelor, from Breast Cancer Care, said its runners had helped ensure that women will not have to face the disease alone. She said every contribution made a 'real difference' to the lives of people dealing with the disease."

Charity runners dressed up and braved the heat.
